Graifrenn and the Rige; + Buaidgein v. Buagnech, Dún Buinne, Mag Buaighnighe, Mag Muagenn, all names referable to the same locality, traversed by a line 12 m. long, Tara—Graifrenn—Buaidgein—Rige, of which Tara and the r. Rye are known; no light as to Graifrenn, but of Buaidgein it is plain that the Rye was to the S of it, Galtrim (b. Lr Deece, c. Meath); Calad Truim i mBuaignib, SG (ed. O’Grady) 401; one point in it, Dunboyne (Dun Buyny, Dun Boyny, Sweetman, CDI an. 1226, i.e. Dún Buaighnighe); another, and that the Boyne and Buagnech were opposite points in Leinster (LL 368, Cóir Anmann (ed. Stokes), 211, 372); thus Buaidgein was a territory comprising at least the bb. of Lower and Upper Deece and Dunboyne, and when it is said that Rumal mac Duinn Désa ruled as k. of Leinster ó Bóinn co Buaidnig (LL 378a) At berat araile roba rig Laigen Ramal mac Duind & is e cetrigh do Laignib ro gab o Boinn go Buaignib, LL 378a, and that Leinster ext. ó Bóinn co Buaidnig (Cóir Anmann (ed. Stokes) 211, 372), it is to be understood that this district formed part of the original kingdom until wrested fr. the Leinster kings after the battle of Crinna, not that Bóinn and Buagnech were the extreme limits of Leinster, as is suggested under Buagnech and Laignin+ cabcenne cabhchenne fluvius C., Arm. 8b1*= ad fluuium Cabcenne peruenerunt, Muirchú §II 14.2 = Patrician texts (ed. Bieler), p. 122*; fr. context seems betw. Saul nr Downpatrick, and Armagh city, prob. nr Armagh, perh. at Cavanacaw *cf. sv Cabhán na Crann Árd *supra a place mentioned in Stuart’s History of Armagh, p. 163, as 2 m. SE of Armagh on the Newry road. The Airthir of Armagh. and the Northern Uí Néill hearing of St Patrick’s death at Saul, went thither to bring him for burial in Armagh; before they reached Saul the body was buried in Down. By a miracle, worked to prevent a battle betw. them and the Ulaid of Down, they found a (phantom) bier at Saul, and took it towards Armagh; but when they were too far away from Saul and Down, and it was too late to go back, the phantom bier (siabharfúat?) vanished. On this I base my attempt at identification; the texts relating to this obscure subject are at Arm. 8b1, 6b1, VT, ed. Stokes, 254, 256, 222, and are given under Collum Bovis, Druim Bó, Muin Daim, qv. Two other places, somewhat out of the line of march, reflect Cabhchenne—viz., tl. Caheny, p. Aghadowey, b. carman aenach carmain, óenach carmain there Aenach Carman was held; was on site of t. of Wexford (O'Curry, MSS Mat. ii 38, O'D. in BR (ed. O'D), and AFM, and Hen. ALC i 34); was in S of c. Kildare (Hen. AU i 345); 'was really in the present c. Carlow' (Hen. AU i 567); was in c. Kildare (Dr Mac Carthy in Index to Annals of Ulster); Hen., in language too long to quote, twice expresses his disedification at 'such an acute topographer' as O'D.'s equation of Carman with (Loch) Garman, 'for which there is no authority'; he objects—1. that if Fedlimid, marching from Cashel to meet the k. in c. Kildare, went round by Wexford, he would probably get very short shrift from the Uí Chennselaig; 2. that when Mac Gilla Pátric inaugurated his succession to the kingship of Ossory by celebrating the Aenach Carmain 'he was not likely to go for that purpose to Wexford, where he would probably get a very warm reception from the Uí Chennselaig'; in support of Henn.'s objections I will add two stronger ones: 3. in AFM ii an. 1079, it is said that Ó Conchobair Failge's land was plundered by the men of Teffia Tethba and Cairpre (who, however, were defeated), and next Ó Conchobair Failge celebrated Aenach Carman; fr. this O'D. infers that Ó Conchobair Failge claimed the highest authority in Leinster, as that fair was held at Wexford; it is incredible that Ó Conchobair Failge made good his claim to predominance over Leinster by celebrating an Aenach at Wexford while the Vikings were there in force and the k. of Leinster and of the Foreigners and of Leth Moga was still powerful; his country was 60 m. fr. Wexford, as the crow flies, and his family had little power in the 11th century, when he held the Aenach, and are only thus noticed by the Four Masters: the lord of Uí Failge killed by his own people in 1051; the lord of Uí Failge blinded by his brother Conchobar in 1070; the lord of Uí Failge slain in battle by Conchobar Ó Conchobair in 1071; in 1079 this Ó Conchobair Failge defeats the men of Cairpre and Teffia Tethba, and afterwards celebrates the aenach Carman; in 1089 Donnchad, lord of Leinster (or of Uí Chennselaig), was slain by Conchobar Ó Conchobair Failge by an unfair advantage (AU ALC say 'a suis occisus est'); in 1094, this Conchobar, lord of Uí Failge, was taken prisoner by Ó Briain, k. of Munster, and in 1115 Ó Briain and the Foreigners of Dublin defeat the Leinstermen in a battle in which were slain the lord of Uí Chennselaig and Conchobar Ó Conchobair Failge, lord of Uí Failge, and his sons; in 1092 Donnchad, son of Ó Conchobair Failge, was killed by his own brothers; a man with such a record as Conchobar Ó Conchobair Failge did not obtain supremacy in all Leinster and celebrate it at Wexford after a triumphant march of 70 or 80 miles; and I conclude that his Aenach Carman was in Uí Failge or nr it. Though I believe that the Aenach Carman of Mac Gilla Phátraic and Ó Conchobair Failge, of not a metaphorical expression, was near their borders, where I will identify a Carman, I do not wish to deprive the faithche of Wexford, now called the faith, or fair-green, of the glories of the ancient Aenach Carman fully described in the Books of Leinster and Ballymote. Yet all the evidence seems to show that Carman was a large plain on the banks of the Burren and the Barrow, which unite at the town of Carlow; here the kings of Leinster, whose palace of Dinn Ríg was close by, held every three years an Aenach—that is, a Grand Council, of their sub-kings and chiefs—an exhibition, a cattle-show, a fair and races; these kings and their civil and military advisors showed great judgement and tact in selecting for the óinach, aednach a place at the geographical, social, political, and military centre of Leinster, nr the royal palace, which was the rendezvous of the warriors of Leinster when about to march against their foes, as we learn fr. Cath Ruis na Ríg, and nr or not far fr., the five great tribal divisions of the province now represented, respectively, by the di. Ossory, Leighlin, Kildare, Ferns, Glendalough (and Dublin); from this central place also they could quickly send a 'punitive' expedition if Munster or Meath were mean enough to invade their borders during the Aenach; that shows it ought to have been there; but, then, Irish eccentricity might have held the Aenach Carman at Loch Carman, at the town of Wexford, where O'Donovan and O'Curry place it; I answer that that Carman was nr the r. Burren in Idrone (Uí Dróna Bairrenn Cliach), which joins the Barrow at Carlow; nr Idrone (Clíu, g. Cliach); nr Dinn Ríg, which is nr Burren and Idrone; nr Berna Cleighi; nr Mag Life; nr Mag Mesca and Uí Failge; in close connections with places nr or not far fr. r. 8° Óenach Carman in ancient and in comparatively modern times was always and only held by kings, sub-kings, and chiefs, whose lands met nr the junction of the Burren with the Barrow. This is clear from the description of it in LL and BB given in O'C, MC, ii 40, as well as from the Irish Annals:— On the right of the k. of Carman, al. k. of the Barrow or Dinn Ríg, sat the k. of Ossory, on his left, the k. of Uí Failge; in accordance with the will of Cathaír Mór, the Uí Failge (al. Síl Rosa Failge), the Laígse, the Fotharta (or Laígse, Fothairt), and the Clann Chondla, al. Osraige, were the chief leaders of the celebrations; the Uí Dróna, in whose land it was, displayed unbounded 'hospitality' (oegidacht hUa nDróna); and the k. of the Barrow distributed the prizes, OC, MC, iii 526–547; in historical times one k. of Osraige and his Ossorians held the Óenach Carman an. 1033, and one k. of Uí Failge did the same in 1079, AFM ii 826, 914, AU i 566, ALC i 34; Carman was one of the seven chief cemeteries of Ireland, at it were many meeting-mounds, 21 raths, seven mounds, seven plains or fields (without a house) reserved for the óenach; it may be said that cúan (harbour), ráth-lind (bounteous water), and bruachaib (banks), applied to Carman, would not suit the t. of Carlow; I think so: the tide goes higher than St Mullins, and from New Ross to Athy (10 miles N of Carlow) the Barrow is navigable by barges; a writer in PGI ii 399, i 316, got very nr the real Carman; 'the Rath or moat of Carman or Mullaghmast nr Ballytore, 6 miles E of Athy, its site is a gently sloping hill crowned by an extensive rath, and nr it are 16 mounds, on which the elders of the states of S Leinster sat in council, these mounds are held in veneration by the peasantry.' carn feradaig LL 17; three or four places, in the region in which it certainly was, suggest or reflect the name

{1} tl. Correenfeeradda, nr and betw. Cnoc Áine and Kilballyowen; Kilballyowen is one of the most conspicuous mansions in the p. of Bruff, c. Limerick, and adjoins the prominent and fertile hill of Knockainy, PGI i 283

{2} fl. Cappanafaraha, p. Bruff, b. Smallcounty, c. Limerick, before Acts 6 and 7 William IV

{3} Cahirnarry, *tl. & p. Cahernarry, b. Clanwilliam (Carn Feradaig), a p. 3.5 m. SE of city of Limerick, and nr Donaghmore, which St Patrick founded

{4} p. Cahircorney (Cathair in Chairn?), nr Loch Gur; there are raths and druidical monuments about it

{5} Loch Gur, in this p. of Cahircorney is surrounded by lofty hills; the extensive assemblage of druidical remains, gigantic relics, on Cnoc in Dúine and other islands about the lake render it, perhaps, the most interesting spot in Ireland for an antiquarian visit (PGI ii 292), and, therefore, for a visit by our Apostle. All these are pretty close together, except Cahirnarry, which is 5 m. fr. Loch Gur. The texts quoted infra point out this particular district, but not the precise hill or carn. Dr. O'Brien, in Vallancey's Collectanea, i 432, says the Carn is on Knockainy; so does Hennessy, CS 365; it is Seefin (CGG (ed. Todd), 309; MacCarthy, in AU-ndx); 'prob. Seefin'. O'D., AFM i 41; but Seefin mts 12.5 m. in a straight line S of Knockainy; however, Lec 204 mentions Carn Feradaig and Cenn Abrat as a S boundary of Cormac Cas's land, and Seefin is nr Cenn Abrat; O'D., in Hy Fiachrach, 344, places it 'nr Limerick'; in AFM-ndx he does not identify. From the following authorities we find that it was—

{1} in Munster, Colgan TT 157

{2} in Clíu, ATig. RC †viii† 180, AU i 96, H. 1. 18, 65; v. Áine Cliach

casse Caisse, Caise

{1} in Mag Life betw. two hillocks (Ériu & Albu)

{2} in Uí Faeláin

{3} nr Grellach Dá Phil, al. Greomach Dá Phil

{4} nr, or at, Cell Auxilli

{5} connected with Áth Truisten and Áth Cille Corbnatan

{6} is or seems a stream: ‘for brú Caisi, for taebh Chaisi’. I think it is in tl. of Mullacash, p. Killashee, b. Naas South, nr Mullacash House (cf. Kilcash = Cell Chaise), and in Mag Life, encircled by the r. Liffey at a distance of fr 2.5 to 5 m., also in Uí Faeláin, and within one m. S of Cell Auxilli or Killashee, and within 4 miles of the p. of Kill; this Mullach Caise may be one of the two hillocks; the road fr. Áth Truisten or Athy to Dublin passes by or through, and nr it crosses the road which leads through Naas to Meath; here Eustace of Mullahassee lived in 1598 (Hogan, Description, p. 47); Laegaire, son of Niall, k. of Meath and Ireland, defeated by the Leinstermen, swore never to exact the cattle-tribute, but soon entered Kildare and lifted cattle all the way fr. Sídh Nechtain (the Sweep of Carbury) to Caise at Mullacash, which was 18 m. SE of Sídh Nechtain, and was killed there by a flash of lightning (the lightning flash of a scian of one of the warriors of Naas which was close by?). I give passages that refer to this hitherto unidentified place:— It e reanda Ua Bairrche la Laighniu .i. From the above we find that Caisse was a stream in Leinster; in Mag Life and nr the Liffey; in Uí Faeláin, which included Naas (in the dry. of which are Cell Uasaille and Mullacash, Tax. p. 246), BR (ed. O'D), 204-5, Giraldus, Top & EH, 100, 314; at Killossy 'oc in Cill', nr which is the p. of Kill; 'for brú and for taeb' point to a r. or rivulet, and if there is such, in Up. or Lower Mullacash flowing betw. two hillocks, I would identify that water as Caisse; Dr Mac Carthy, in AU-ndx, places Grellach Dá Phil betw. the hills of Dunmurry and Allen, but gives no reason for so doing

All old records call this the battle of Dublin; AFM alone marks the precise spot:—Cath Átha Cliath .i. i Cill MoSamhócc la toeb Átha Cliath, AFM ii 592; they speak of it as matan Átha C. i nÁth C., téis matan moch do Áth Cliath; Niall glundub mac Aeda aird/ Conchobar o Thulaigh Thaidc/ is Mael Dub rí Airgiall án/ & Aed mac Eochochan/ frith a n-airlech cen timmi/ ris sluag ndagrech Dublinni, BL i 132 (Fíanna bátar i nEmain). In the year 920 Niall's successor avenged this cath Átha Cliath by defeating the Vikings with great slaughter, AFM ii 592–8; called cath (Átha C., ic. Áth Cliath, occ Duiblinn), LL 25b, BB 49a, CS 190, CGG 34, AU i 438; 'the great battle of Dublin', ACLon. 146; i n-Áth C., BB 50b; therefore, C. M. was at Dublin, and not 6 m. off; 2°. C. M. was at Dublin:—Cell MoShamóc Dublinde, Lec 117; MoShamóc Dublinne, LL 368; Cell MoSamócc la taeb Átha Cliath, AFM ii 592; 3° we find the side (taeb) and the spot the charter of John Lord of Ireland, of year 1192, states the metas or boundaries of Dublin: 'In Occidentali parte de Dublin ab Ecclesia S Patricii per vallem usque ad Karnanclonagunethe ['Carnoclohyunaghe, that is by Dolphin's barne', Gilbert's Calendar of Ancient Records of Dublin, vol 1, p. 194] (Carnán Clono Uí Dhúinchada, now corrupted to Dolphin's Barn, at which is a remarkable heap or mound [carnán]) et deinde usque ad divisam terrae de Kylmenan, et ultra aquam de Kylmeinan juxta Auenelith [the Liffey] usque ad vada de Kilmehauoc, et ultra aquam de Auenelith versus Boream per Ennocnagauhoc', Gilbert's National MSS. of Ireland, II, lxxv; in a copy of this charter, an. 1200, Sweetman, CDI, p. 22, it is written Cellmohafoch; *Kilmehafoch in the confirmation of John Lord of Ireland, AD 1200 (Thomas Duffus Hardy (ed), Rotuli chartarum in turri Londonensi asservati i/1 (London 1837) p. p. 78b–79a);* the citizens of Dublin in 1236 grant to Randulf le Hore a meadow ext. fr. the old quarry of the Oustmans Ostmen to Kilmehanok; the l. of Kylmaynan so far as the water of Avenlyf, thence nr that water so far as the ford of Kilmehanoc, and beyond the water of Avenlyf, towards the N by Ennocnegannoc towards Cobragh of Dublin (now Cabra), Gilbert's Ancient Records of Dublin, i 81, 157, at p. 190 of which we have the Ryding of the Frauncheses and Liberties of the City of Dublin according to ancient custome preambulated in 1603: 'We passed over the water of Cammok betwixt the arrable land called now the Leis of Kilmayneham, and so directly westward to that parte of the meddowe that lyeth opposite uppon that part of the hill called Kilmahennocks hill and now the hill of Isold's font which is a bow shot of the west syde of Isold's font and west of Ellen Hoare's meddowe over which font is a great hathorne tree and in that parte of the meddowe of Kilmainehame the Maior Swoordberer and others tooke boate and passed upp the water of Aunlyffe neer Kilmaineham bridg wher was said was a foorde called Kilmahenocks foord and then tooke horse and rode eastward over and by north Isold's font and to the font itselpe and then rode to the slade by northwest the west end of Ellen Hore's meddowe and in and throughe that slade northward wher was saide of oulde time was a buyshe of hathorne and so to the top of the hill'. &c. So, Cell MoShamhócc, al. Kilmehauoc, al. Cellmohafoch, was nr the Ford of Kilmehanoc (l. Kilmehauoc), now spanned by Island Bridge, a little on the N of which are rudera, which to Charles McNeill seem to mark the site of the well, i.e. Isold's font, half way on a straight line betw. the Wellington Monument and the Magazine Fort, Phoenix Park. I would add to our Félires:—MoŠamóc Dublinne, LL 368, Lec 117, AFM ii 592; MoŠamhóc Boithe Comair, BB 125a, Lec 117; MoŠamóc Bothaire, LL 368.

O'Curry) 66, says: 'C. was a hill in Meath, and according to the Dinnsenchus was a place of noble sepulture in pagan and Christian times; it lay in a straight line between Slane in Meath and Lusk in c. Dublin; the name is prob. preserved in the tl. Carnes, p. Duleek, b. Upper Duleek, c. Meath, *Walsh, Irish men of learning, 233–4*; in O'Curry, MSS Mat. 259 he says: 'Conaire drove by the hill of C., Lusk, and the Great Road of Cualann to Dublin, and crossing the Liffey above Dublin went on to Bruden Dá Derga'; O'C. must have found Lusk in some version of the tale, or found that it lay on or by Slige Cualann; the crossing above Dublin would be at the ford, afterwards called the Ford of Cell MoShamóc at Islandbridge; in support of O'Curry's view, I add that there were Áth Carne and Dona Kernie .i. Domnach Cerne i. Ecclesia Cerne,tl. Donacarney, p. Colpe, b. Lower Duleek, c. Meath (Hogan, Description, p. 93); but I identify Ecclesia Cerne with Celcarne Castle and tl. & p. Kilcarn, b. Skreen, c. Meath (cf. Hogan, Description, p. 92), and also the Cerna by which Conaire passed; this Cerne is a tl. & p. 3 m. SSE of Navan, and 5 m. N of Tara, where there are also Templecarne and Kilcarne bridge over the Boyne, and an ancient 'fort', mound or rath (the síd primreilec); this suits the statement in *TBDD (ed. Stokes), RC xxii 32 §26 = TBDD (ed. clíu 1 cliu g. Cliach, d. Clíu, Arm. 18ba; in Idrone, c. Carlow; Conaire slew Nuadu Necht 'i cath Cliach i nUíb Dróna'. LL 23a, 129a, Keating (ed Haliday), 406, AFM i 88, CS 42, AClon. 48, 77; named in connexion with Airgetros nr tl. Ballyragget (p. Donaghmore, b. Fassadinin, c. Kilkenny), which is not far fr. Idrone; Dau and Dá were sons of Aengus, Dáu was in Clíu, and Dá in Airgetros, MacFirbis, Genealogies, 628, Lec 413; there was a monastery of St Brigit in Clíu, AASS iii 106; now in the p. Tullowreen, b. Idrone West, nr the Barrow, 'the principal antiquity is the ruin of St Brigit's ch'. (PGI iii 420); if Clíu be not there (and I think it is), it may be around the demesne of Tullowclay (Tulach Cliach?) ? = tl. Tullowbeg, p. Fennagh b. Idrone East; in support of this I suggest that place names in this parish reflect the place names mentioned in connexion with Clíu in Arm. 18aa, ab; Clíu, g. Cliach (Tullowclay), Féna (Fennagh), Fid (Druim Fedha, Drumfea chapelry (*tl. Coshlea, and 6.5 m. on its border and that of c. Cork; the Top. Poems, p. 130, put Uaithne Cliach, Ára (Cliach), Crotta Cliach and Uí Chuanach in consecutive stanzas, and so point to their proximity to each other; Clíu Máil meic Úgaine *Augaiane was the l. of Cú Roí, son of Dáire mac Dedad, al. Crích Déise Bec, LL 264a, al. b. Smallcounty; p. Killeady in Déis Bec, AASS i 1062, lviii 647; Ane des in dry. Kilmallock, Tax; Grian Cliach (AU ii 160) in it, that is the p. and dry. of Grene; p. Grean of which 5,680 acres are in b. Coonagh, and 1,511 in b. Clanwilliam; the surface hilly and the best grazing ground in c. Limerick; the chief seats are Derc, which commands an extensive view of the brilliant circumjacent country, and Sunville, PGI ii 288; Sunville reflects Grian; Pallasgreen vill. is in this p; Greene dry. comprised p. Cahercorney (in b. Smallcounty), Tax; p. Liscormaick, al. Aglishcormaick part of which is in b. Coonagh, and in b. Clanwilliam, Tax. and PGI; p. Kilkellane, or Kilcullane (3.5 m. SE of Sixmilebridge), in b. Smallcounty, also Dronmon Church of the manor of Any in dry. of Aherlow, Westropp; also Corbally, Tax., and p. Kilfrush, S of Hospital in b. Smallcounty, Westropp; also p. Aglishcormaick in b. Clanwilliam, p. Grean, b. Coonagh, p. Ballinlough in b. Coonagh, also Tuath Aoise Gréine Tuath Aesa Gréine, Aes Gréine or p. Tuogh in b. Owneybeg, 4 m. NE of Pallasgreen), Westropp; Aes Gréine qv, included Castleconnell and Singland; again, Uaithne

Cliach, qv, was in Clíu, which is the b. of Owneybeg, Top. Poems, 128, AU i 432, and dry. Owney; in the dry. Owney are Caherconlish, Oola, Caherelly nr L. Gur, Rathjordan, Westropp; it seems also that Clíu, al. Áine, included Glynn in b. Shanid, as the Knights of Glynn are called the Knights of the Valley of Anye, Sweetman CDI an. 1215; Dún Cuille al.* Dún Cuilne al. Síid Cuilne, Táin bó Dartada* of Clíu was in Uí Chuanach, Lec 208 (p. Doon, b. Coonagh, c. Limerick); as it seems from LL 268b that Temair Luachra was in Clíu Máil meic Úgaine, and Luachair ext. into c. Cork and c. Limerick, and was conterminous with Claonghlais, Claenglais a district in b. Upper Connelloe, c. Limerick (Top. Poems, lxxiii, lxxv), so did Clíu. From all this I gather that Clíu included E half of c. Limerick, plus the b. of Owney and Ara to Killaloe (at L. Derg), viz., the bb. Owneybeg, Coonagh, Clanwilliam, Smallcounty, Coshma, Coshlea, Pubblebrien, Upper Connelloe (and even Shanid?); if the extent of Clíu is, perh., overstated by me, it is unduly restricted by others:—as co-ext. with bb. of Coonagh and Smallcounty (MacCarthy in AU-ndx), in b. Coshlea (O’Curry, O’Curry, MSS Mat. 480), in b. Coshlea, betw. Knockainy and Slieveveagh (O’D., AFM v 1648) in SE of c. #CLUAIN

cluain means ‘pratum’. O’S, Hist. Cath. p. 138, Colgan AASS, 748; ‘latibulum’. Colgan AASS, 354, ‘a plain betw. two woods, a fine level, fit for pasture’. O’Brien, Dictionary; ‘saltus’. Cluain Ferta qui dicitur Saltus virtutum; fr. which, as ‘qui’ is masculine, I gather that ‘Cluain’ is also; but it is feminine in AU an. 542; three Cluana of Ireland are: Cluain Meic Nóis, Cluain Eois, Cluain Iraird, BB 42a; when Cluain alone is mentioned it is not always possible to know which of those three is meant, or whether it is Cloyne or another place; but, as a rule, it is Clonmacnoise and next Cloyne di. or t.; * meadow, pasture land, glade; cluain gabála, glossed herbagium, DIL s.v. ; prairie, pâturage, LEIA*
